April 2023 SQE2 marking review

Kaplan, our SQE assessment provider, has now finished its review of an isolated marking error for the SQE2 sitting in April. The results of this review were presented to the SQE Assessment Board in October and these were:

- No errors were found for the vast majority of candidates (324) and therefore their marks did not change
- Some candidates' marks (21) increased very slightly for the BCMA assessment station, but this did not lead to a change in their overall SQE2 result
- One candidate's marks were increased for the one assessment station, which led to them passing the SQE2 assessment overall
- Because of this very limited impact, the post-assessment statistical report will not change.

Kaplan has contacted all affected candidates and apologised for the uncertainty this caused. It has also further reviewed its processes in light of this error.

Qualifying through the Qualified Lawyers Transfer Scheme (QLTS) deadline

If you have passed the QLTS MCT and SQE2, or do so after sitting SQE2 in October, you have until 31 March 2024 (inclusive) to apply for admission as a solicitor.

If you have already sat and failed the SQE2, or not taken it at all, take a look at our website to see what you need to do next.

LPC route and our transitional arrangements

We have arrangements in place to make sure those that were already on their way to becoming a solicitor didn't lose out once the SQE was introduced. This means someone who was already studying or training to become a solicitor by 21 September 2021 could continue to qualify through the LPC route.

This includes anyone who had:

- a qualifying law degree / exempting law degree
- the Common Professional Examination / Graduate Diploma in Law
- the Legal Practice Course
- a period of recognised training (often known as a training contract).
